Commissions include any remuneration received for the transaction of various investments such as mutual funds, equities, certain fixed income securities such as bonds, and other types of investments. For some debt securities purchased or sold for you during this period, dealer firm remuneration was added to the price you paid (in the case of a purchase) or deducted from the price you received (in the case of the sale). This amount was in addition to the commissions you were charged and may not be reflected on this report.

Trailing commissions include trailing commissions paid on certain investments such as mutual funds, segregated funds and exchange traded funds. The amount indicated is the trailing commission your dealer received in respect to the investments you owned during the period of this report. Investment funds pay investment managers a fee for managing their funds. The managers pay ongoing trailing commissions for services and advice provided to you. The amount of trailing commissions usually depends on the sales charge option you choose when you purchased the fund. You are not directly charged the trailing commission or the management fee. However, these fees do affect you because they reduce the amount of the fund's return to you. Information about management fees and other charges are included in the prospectus or fund facts document applicable to each fund.

Dealer fees include any remuneration paid to your dealer by investment fund managers, such as advisory fees, excluding commissions and trailing commissions.
